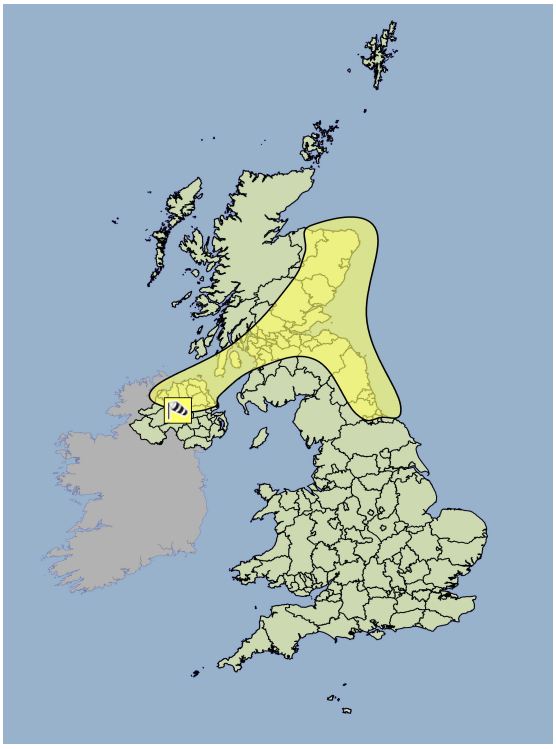
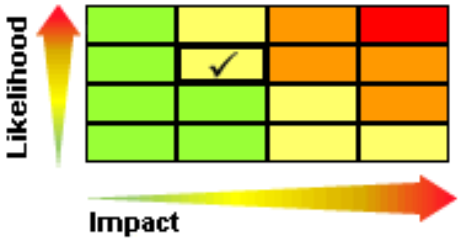
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
A deep area of low pressure will cross the extreme northwest of Scotland during Tuesday bringing gales across many northern areas of Britain. It will be particularly gusty to the east of high ground in Scotland and the far northeast of England.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Wind

Valid from 06:00 on Tue, 16th Apr 2013 until 23:00 on Tue, 16th Apr 2013

Very strong and gusty southwesterly winds, which developed across Northern Ireland early on Tuesday, are now extending across much of Scotland and parts of northern England. Gusts of 50 to 60 mph are expected quite widely, while gusts in excess of 65 mph seem likely in some of the more exposed locations. Winds across Northern Ireland will ease, and with the strongest winds becoming confined to northern Scotland on Tuesday evening.

The public should be aware that some minor disruption is likely, particularly across northern parts of Northern Ireland, central and eastern Scotland and the far northeast of England.

This warning has been updated to make more mention of localised gusts exceeding 65 mph, although it should be noted that in this particular type of situation, not all areas will see these stronger gusts.
